

The resource I have created is meant to give a brief description of some of the interesting but 'invisible' pieces of heritage on the campus and could perhaps be used as a part of another website for the university as these are often overlooked on brochures and such. The descriptions and photos are left to minimal detail as the web page is meant to only spark an interest in thinking about the landmarks rather than give a full description and to engage the mind in wondering what these may have looked like rather than giving an outright representation.

The original idea was sparked by my interpretation of this years title 'The bones of our past' it made me think about the buildings and other pieces of heritage on the campus and how some are merely shells or remains of what they once were. I had to rely mostly on documents detailing the description of the previous buildings so perhaps had there been some actual images, the project may have been able to go into more detail rather than giving an approximate area these places may have covered.

Resources used:

<https://www.wix.com/>

Newton park conservation management plan, appendix 2.1