The video was created during the Archaeological Exploration of Barda excavation season in September 2015.

More than 6000 sherds of pottery and 17kg of bone were collected, processed and catalogued during the 4 week excavation season, and although these will become part of a museum collection, maybe one or two artefacts will end up on public display. Using stop-motion photography, this video records the process of turning archaeological material into a catalogued museum collection, which will be stored in the state museum archives in Barda.

We hope that it provides a snapshot of the volume of material and steps involved.

Thanks to our local collaborators, in particular Vidade and his amazing voice!
